Uber Eats leverages Alia's brand recall value

With the Bollywood actress at her bubbly best in a new campaign, the fight for the number three slot in online food ordering is getting stiffer hungry Alia Bhatt walks out of a party to dine with a friend at home. She rushes to the kitchen to help herself with food and is greeted by the humble apple gourd or tinda (in Hindi) in a container. She is upset and threatens to walk out, but is saved in time by Uber Eats, the food ordering app that sits on her phone. She and her friend help themselves with burgers ordered using the app.

TE NARASIMHAN

Chennai, 21 January

For viewers of this commercial, currently on across television channels, a smile of recognition comes easily. There have been innumerable times when consumers have wished to escape from home food, opting instead for fancy fare from a neighbourhood restaurant or hotel. For all those moments now, there is Uber Eats.

The campaign, which is the first featuring Bhatt, appointed in November, makes no bones about what it wishes to achieve: Brand recall. In a competitive market, estimated to be ₹ 50,000 crore in size and growing at 15-20 per cent per quarter, experts say the fight for the top three spots is stiff.

Swiggy and Zomato claim to be clocking a monthly order run rate of 28 million, though the former achieved the number ahead of the latter, say experts, giving it an edge over its rival. Zomato also had to contend with consumer backlash last month following a delivery boy's move to eat from a customer's food packet, denting its brand image. Zomato has since apologised for the incident, launching tamper-proof packs recently.

With Swiggy and Zomato therefore fighting tooth and nail with each other for leadership of the market, it is the third spot that is drawing attention of players such as Foodpanda, backed by Ola, and Uber Eats, part of the

Uber group. In 2017, Foodpanda had appointed actor Shahrukh Khan as its brand ambassador with the objective of driving brand salience, basically goading consumers to order food during any daypart, to satiate their hunger. Foodpanda also drove home the message of aggressive offers through the campaign. devised the cur-

While Uber Eats is making no such claims, the bid to get consumers to try out its app, especially, in moments of distress, is familiar, say brand experts.

Bhavik Rathod, head of Uber Eats India and South Asia, says it was looking for a strong connect with the youth through an ambassador such as Bhatt. She is the on the consumer's ordering such as the south, where it doesfirst brand endorser for Uber behaviour instead," she says.

RBI refuses to budge on FPI portfolio limits

The FPIs' contention was that the RBI should go back to the old regime. The RBI said it did not want to tinker with the new rules, and that it was offering the investors a new route under the VRR," said a source familiar with the matter.

In October, the RBI came out with a discussion paper with proposals to introduce the VRR. Investments through the route would be free of the macro-prudential and other regulatory prescriptions applicable to FPI investments in debt markets, provided the FPIs voluntarily commit to retain on Monday. FPI investments in SDLs are Currency volatility, concerns on fiscal slipa required minimum percentage of their investments in India for a period of their choice, the discussion paper stated. For instance, FPI investments through the VRR shall be exempt from the cap on short-term investments (less than a year) at 20 per cent of the portfolio size, concentration limits, and caps on exposure to a corporate group. The total amounts for investment through the VRR shall be separately indicated for government securities (G-Sec) and corporate debt (including commercial paper), and shall be individually allocated to FPIs through an auction process. The minimum retention period for allotments under each auction would be three years or as decided by the RBI.
